Evaluation of the gel filtration column method for measurement of serum immunoglobulins in horses. We evaluated the use of gel filtration columns for the determination of serum immunoglobulin concentrations in horses. The methods used varied in terms of elution volumes and filter type used. We found that varying the filtration volume of a serum sample was essential for adequate separation of IgG from IgM. Our results indicate that an elution volume of 10 to 13 ml, if used with the 250-kDa column, is optimal for separating IgM from IgG.
